5 November 2018 - Sydney - Australian company, Tenderfield Construction Software, has released its brand-new mark-up tools that allow contractors to collaborate on their construction plans and add marked-up drawings to construction notices. The company has also implemented BIM & CAD file viewing capabilities that can be used on any smart device.

Tenderfield Director and Co-founder, Jason Kamha, said: "Our mission is to continue to provide innovative solutions to help our clients optimise their project management practices to achieve more efficiency and to reduce project risks."

"These latest tools are available for clients who manage projects on the Tenderfield platform, as well as for other project stakeholders who collaborate with the company's clients. For anyone interested, this short video explains the latest updates <http://bit.ly/tenderfieldrelease>", he said.

The company employs information technology to help contractors improve their construction project management practices without incurring a large upfront capital outlay. It offers a cloud-based construction management platform comprising a package of software, storage and support for a monthly subscription fee.

Kamha said that the platform provides tools to manage the tender/bidding process, project document control, project management and gives contractors access to a pre-qualified network of sub-contractors.

"The design of the platform focuses on ease of use, the automation of construction management processes and enabling all project stakeholders to work together simultaneously and collaboratively", he said.

The company recently received a Merit Award at the Australian Information Industry Association (AIIA) in the Business Service Market category. It also won the prestigious 2018 Business Development Award from the Hong Kong-Australia Business Association (HKABA).
